This powerful, multiple award-winning, documentary shows how the inventiveness of ordinary Cubans has defied the embargo imposed by the most powerful nation on earth. Demonstrating that necessity is the mother of invention (and of recycling as well).

As the Miami New Herald, no friend of the Cuban Revolution, has said of this film: “After the revolution of 1959 and the U.S. embargo that followed, the people of Cuba were left to fend for themselves. Deprived of even the most basic goods, they scavenge the alleys and scrap heaps, giving new vitality to the discarded. Their recycled products are often remarkably ingenious and creative. For [...] the subjects of Sin Embargo, even the greatest pressure cannot crush the spirit nor quash the desire to forge a better life for themselves and their families. Shot entirely in Cuba, Sin Embargo is a look into the hearts and dreams of struggling peoples and a tribute to their optimistic and resourceful determination to survive.”
