 With Rev. Kathryn Beilke Introduction by Karen Kaufman While the depth and breadth of the plastic pollution crisis can be overwhelming, we can still turn the tide. Rev. Beilke will discuss not only the far reaching implications that plastic has for our planet and health, but also the variety of solutions that Beyond Plastics' advocates across the country are working on and the imperative to act now. Because not only is plastic a climate change issue, an environmental justice issue, and a public health issue but it is a moral issue which urgently demands our attention and action.
 Rev Beilke is ordained in the Presbyterian Church (USA), served for a decade as pastor of a progressive congregation in the Hudson Valley, but the spiritual urgency of our current climate and ecological crisis prompted her to leave the pulpit to work on effective solutions. Rev. Beilke worked with communities navigating New York State's Climate Smart Communities Initiative before coming on board at Beyond Plastics where she currently serves as development manager with special emphasis on interfaith partnerships. She loves enjoying nature with her husband George and two children Harvest (9) and River (7). 12:50 Tech Staff Support
